ROWING

Cats end five year
KU streak

Sam Nearhood | COLLEGIAN

It took six years to muster their strength, but the Jayhawks finally had enough. On Saturday, the University of Kansas took back the Kansas Cup for the first time since 2004 in women's rowing.

The Kansas Cup is the annual throw-down between K-State and Kansas. The Wildcats held the coveted title for five years straight, but they could not pull it off this year after losing 12-8 to their in-state rivals. However, there was a bright spot in the competition.

Despite dropping the overall meet, K-State won arguably the most important race of the day: the 1st Varsity 8. Pulling across the line in 7:11.2, the Wildcats picked up eight points - their only points of the day - with Kansas five seconds behind.

In all other races, Kansas took the points. K-State nearly clinched a couple more wins, losing five points in the 2nd Varsity 8 race by four seconds at 7:16.5 and three points in the 1st Novice 8 race by five seconds at 7:29.2.

The Jayhawks also earned 3 points in the 1st Varsity 4 race and a single point in the 2nd Varsity 4 by wide margins.

K-State will take two weeks to rest and recuperate in anticipation of the Southern IRAs in Tennessee.

K-State to start Texas tournament today

Tyler Scott | COLLEGIAN

As a whole, the men's golf team has struggled to link together this season. K-State will try to change that when it hits the course today.

The Wildcats have traveled to Austin, Texas, to participate in the 44th annual Morris Williams Intercollegiate hosted by the University of Texas. The course is a par-71 and a lengthy 7,412 yards.

Senior Joe Kinney looks to put together back-to-back top-10 finishes after he finished tied for fifth at the Desert Shootout in Goodyear, Ariz. Senior Mitchell Gregson is trying to find the same stroke he had during the fall season where he placed in the top-10 three times. So far, in the two matches this spring, he has placed 25th and 42nd, respectively.

"Kinney doesn't put a lot of pressure on himself like some other golfers might do," head coach Tim Norris said. "He works hard and stays patient on bad stretches of holes and doesn't lose composure."

Norris said Mitch is looking forward to this event because playing on tough golf courses can help him out. He and Jason Schulte have experience on this course, which could lead to an advantage.

The field consists of 15 teams and it will be the toughest competition this season for the Wildcats. The field includes six teams ranked in the top-25: top-ranked Oklahoma State, fourth-ranked Texas A&M and fifth-ranked Texas lead the field. TCU, Texas Tech, Baylor, SMU, Tulsa, Pepperdine, UT San Antonio, Arkansas, New Mexico and LSU are also in the mix. Norris said playing against this kind of competition is good preparation for the Big 12 Championship.

"These last three weeks are like the beginning of the season rather than the end," Norris said.

Returning from a thumb injury, senior Joe Ida wants to put the Desert Shootout match in the back of his head and focus on this one. Norris explained Ida's mindset coming into today.

"He's excited and ready to go," Norris said. "He practiced with a protective bandage after having a bruise. It's important for everyone to stay healthy, and Ida being at full strength gives us a great opportunity to play well."

The tournament tees off at 8 a.m. today with a 36-hole shotgun start. On Tuesday, the teams will start again at 8 a.m. and will shoot from the number one and 10 tees.

Fans can find results from the first two rounds at kstatesports.com.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Wildcats change lineup for Florida Classic

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

Freshman Hannah Roos takes a shot at the Sunflower Invitational last fall on Sept. 28.

Ashley Dunkak | COLLEGIAN

As the women's golf team prepares for the Canes/Cards Classic in Miami Lakes, Fla., it does so with a slightly different traveling lineup. Red-shirt freshman Kristen Dorsey will be competing in her first spring tournament along with teammates Abbi Sunner and Morgan Moon, seniors, Elise Houtz, junior, and Hanna Roos, freshman.

After a disappointing third round in Tucson, Ariz., last week, the team had a qualifying tournament in Manhattan to determine who would travel for the next competition. Coach Kristi Knight said Moon won the qualifier, and Houtz finished second. They were only qualifying for three spots, so Roos and Sunner were exempt based on their play to this point in the spring season. Knight said it was a very competitive two-day event.

"Sometimes the best thing when things aren't going quite right, when your game's in a little bit of a lull, kind of the best thing to do is come home and beat your own in a competition, and that's what the ladies did," Knight said.

Knight said it was nice to come home from a tournament and be able to practice outside every day. She said that's a little perk they haven't had to this point and she feels like the ladies did a good job taking advantage of the weather and practiced well. Houtz has been hitting the ball well, and Sunner and Roos have played solidly throughout the week. Moon is determined and looking to bounce back after Tucson and has put in a lot of practice time this last week.

"Morgan and Elise, neither one was crazy about how they did in Tucson, but both came out and were sharp," Knight said. "They're motivated. They know that the final round in Tucson, we were in position to have a nice tournament and it didn't quite work out for it. You have to put it behind you and move on. You can't dwell on it"

The team's practice round was 12:30 p.m. on Easter Sunday. Knight said it is not uncommon for the team to be traveling on the holiday but that the ladies would get to sleep in and go to church early if they wanted. She said usually the team has at least one or two parents who bring candy for the ladies on Easter, Knight said. However, there won't be parents at this tournament.

The coach says the team is like a family itself and does not think the players feel cheated at all. She said it is part of the sport just as it is for the young men playing in the Final Four or the baseball teams traveling now.

As far as the competition, Knight said it is a field of teams they haven't really seen. Originally both Texas Tech and Colorado were signed up to compete, but the field has changed. Now there are some smaller southeast schools mixed in with Maryland, Penn State and Texas State, Knight said.

"We'll take care of ourselves like we do at every tournament," Knight said. "We're not really concerned about any other team."

Health care bill limits insurance companies' reign

President Obama promises health care reform will be beneficial to citizens of the United States. Most Democrats salivate when the bill is mentioned and resonate Obama's promise. All vocal Republicans promise to repeal the bill and burn any form of documentation relating to it.

And while it will take decades before either party can say, "I told you so" about the bills' economic effects, the parts of the bill that rein in the profit mongering tactics of insurance companies are good for all citizens. Accordingly, it would be in the best interest of the U.S. to ensure those parts' survival, regardless of what happens to the rest of the bill.

Before I start, please understand I am not supporting or criticizing the bill in its entirety, because I'm not an economic or health care analyst; I'm a confused 20-year-old student. I am only pointing out the few parts of the bill I feel no one can disagree with and why.

First off, the bill will prohibit insurance companies from placing a cap on the amount of money a policy will provide in one year or in a person's lifetime. To better understand this change's positive effect, imagine your mother gets cancer and needs chemotherapy that costs $250,000 over the course of one year, but your policy will only reimburse her $100,000 a year.

Although your mother has paid that company a good chunk of her annual income for the past 20 years, your family will have to find a way to cover the rest of the cost. But now, if your policy says it covers chemotherapy, it covers all of your chemotherapy.

Insurance companies will also be required to allow children to stay on their parent's plans until their 26th birthday. Before the bill passed, insurance companies were only required to allow children to remain on their parents' plan until the age of 18. For most of this paper's readership, that's no big change. As long as we were college students, we didn't have anything to worry about; we were covered by the University or our parent's plans that allow full-time college students the benefits of their coverage.

But what happened when we graduated? Usually a grace period of a year was allowed to give us time to find a job and get our own big-kid health insurance. That may have worked in the past, but with an unemployment plateau at 10 percent, I don't know anyone who would bet their health on the availability of a job in this market.

Another big change is that insurance companies will now be required to put an appeals process into every plan, so that we can legally question the decision of the insurance company to deny coverage of treatment. Before the bill, some policies had written in the fine print that all decisions were final. So, if you had a deviated septum and needed reconstructive surgery, but the insurance company said you just wanted a free nose job, they could deny you coverage before you made an argument. This change gives those policyholders the right to prove the medical necessity of any denied treatment.

Most importantly, for all U.S. citizens, private insurance companies can no longer base or raise your premium, or how much you must pay the company each year, for the same insurance policy due to a pre-existing or acquired condition. This is pretty heavy in jargon, so let's go back to the cancerous mother we met earlier for clarification. You've found a loan to pay the extra $150,000, Mom has fully recovered, and everything is great.

Until you get a letter from the insurance company: "Your liability has changed from subcategory 1A to subcategory 2B. Your premium has increased from $10,000 a year to $50,000 a year. No worries, though! We're not going to change anything else about your plan: what procedures it will cover, the quality of doctors you can visit or your annual coverage cap. Have a great life!"

In other words, you're getting a monetary punishment for getting sick. And if you are out looking for health care with your new job, but happen to have a pre-existing condition like asthma or diabetes, the insurance companies could slap you with a higher premium or refusal of coverage for something you have no control over.

With the new health care bill, all of these real nightmares transform into the trivial nightmares of the insurance company officials: no more astronomic profits at the cost of the American people. We should not have to sit with our fingers crossed, hoping that the fine print in our policy will end up being more detrimental to our health than cigarette smoke, and thanks to the aforementioned parts of the bill, we no longer do. Let's keep it that way.

Life to be enjoyed instead of stressed

Rachel Spicer

Yesterday, many students traveled home to spend Easter with family. I, however, felt it would be a good time to write a "happy" article rather than one centered around politics or highly debatable topics.

It is weird how sometimes in life, things just hit you for some inexplicable reason. I was walking across Denison Avenue the other day, all stirred up about classes and work, when I saw some people playing out in this gorgeous weather. I realized that when those moments happen they fade away so quickly when the dark troublesome clouds start rolling in.

It seems today nearly everyone is always worried about things, such as finances, politics and the economy. It has become increasingly easier to forget about the little things that make life worth living, the everyday things we tend to take advantage of.

Simple details, like your best friend asking how your day was, are often washed away in stress.

Even the major details of having food to eat and a roof over your head with people in your life who love you seem obsolete when you're focused on keeping your life in order.

To prevent these things from happening, I try to think of all of the opportunities my life has provided that less fortunate people aren't able to have. There are people all around the world who can't put food on the table or go down to a convenience store for a cold drink on a hot day.

People suffer every day from poverty and natural disasters, so getting all worked up or depressed about small effects seems dense. Taking advantage of all this country has allowed us to have is an error of judgment, or a loss of foresight.

Things get bad, but then they tend to get better if you let them. Don't let the bad times ruin the good times you've had. Go enjoy life.

Rachel Spicer is a junior in civil engineering. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Gov't. calls for auto makers to clean up their act

Danny Davis

Recent changes in Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards, while they were to be expected, come at the expense of the American consumer. The Obama administration began calling for a higher fuel economy standard in 2009, catering to the environmental lobbyists.

With the new standard, passenger cars will have to achieve an average of 35.5 mpg to reduce carbon emissions by 2016. The new "Clean Car" rule will begin with the 2012 model year by making a gradual shift in requirements for automakers to meet.

While I care about the environment and do things like recycling, I don't believe the new CAFE standards are in the best interests of the American consumer and automaker.

Looking to buy a new car in 2016? The price will be an estimated $985 more than it would have cost in 2010. And that's if the federal government is correct on their estimates.

The cost for automakers is staggering. It will cost the industry, according to the government, $51.5 billion to design "cleaner" cars.

Some of the ways they hope to achieve this is by building smaller cars and using lighter materials. I can't stand small cars. Not for their "green" factor, but more for their safety factor. Studies have shown, if logical reasoning was not enough, that small cars are not as safe as larger vehicles.

Having seen the damage first hand that my truck inflicted upon a small car during a collision, I'm a firm believer that safety should not be sacrificed for fuel economy.

That is, however, what the government is asking automakers to do. Cheaper, lighter materials will be substituted for more solid components as car sizes shrink.

Also, the costs that the auto industry will incur are staggering. With higher development costs, companies will have less money to spend on employee salaries. And is it a good idea to force companies to incur these costs right after the industry just weathered a recession?

The new CAFE standards are a mere by-product of the global warming madness that has swept the nation. If consumers wish to purchase eco-friendly vehicles, the option has been there for the past five years. Government mandates forcing all vehicles to meet eco-friendly specifications also force the consumer to use the money on different products to allocate more money for the sake of catering to lobbyists.

Another reason for increasing fuel economy is to reduce our dependence on foreign oil. While in the theory this is good, in practice it has flaws.

Smaller cars translates to smaller engines. What happens if a consumer decides he wants a powerful car or needs a powerful truck? Eco-friendly cars cannot deliver the speed or power at the currently affordable prices.

The U.S. government has set the automobile industry on a slippery slope for the next six years. Once 2016 arrives (assuming the world doesn't end in 2012) the government will demand more from the auto industry.

Innovation will be key during the next few years as the industry develops new ways for customers to save fuel. But in reality, it's not about the fuel, it's about the carbon emissions – and the environmental lobbyists and global warming activists.

Sunset Zoo’s Eggstravaganza offers educational activities

Visitors learn about bearded dragons during Sunset Zoo’s Eggstravaganza event Saturday afternoon. The day was full of activities for children to learn more about the animals at the zoo. Young visitors were able to meet the Easter Bunny, see animals up close, listen to zookeepers give seminars about different animals at the zoo and dig for dinosaur bones.

Ag Fest to host events this week

City club re-opens with ‘Bike Week’

The college of agriculture student council is showcasing agriculture during Ag Fest this week.

“Ag Fest is a great opportunity for students to interact with each other and learn what is going on in the agriculture industry,” said Miles Theurer, a non-degree graduate in animal sciences and industry. Theurer also serves as Agriculture Student Council president.

Ag Fest starts with a panel discussion tonight at 7 in Forum Hall. The discussion will cover climate change and how it affects the agriculture industry. Speakers in the discussion panel will include Kansas Secretary of Agriculture Josh Svaty, Kansas House Rep. Sharon Schwartz and Professor of agnomy Clenton Owensby.

“The panel is an opportunity to educate people not only involved in agriculture but all departments about what is currently happening,” Theurer said.

Students of the College of Agriculture will also participate in an Ag Olympics Tuesday in Weber Arena at 7.

“This is just a way to step back and get to know people on a different level,” Theurer said. “It’s an opportunity to interact with each other and have some fun.”

“The panel is an opportunity to educate people not only involved in agriculture but all departments about what is currently happening.”

A Kiddie Barnyard for surrounding grade schools will be held Wednesday at 9:30 a.m. in Weber Arena. Theurer said the barnyard educates children on where their food comes from. With the increasing distance between rural and urban America, many people believe milk comes from just the store and not first from a dairy cow, he said.

The Alpha Gamma Rho and FarmHouse fraternities are sponsoring a free barbecue on the Weber Hall lawn Thursday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Ag Fest’s grand finale will be a concert in Weber Arena with the Jared Daniels Band opening for the Jack Ingram band. Pre-sold tickets are $15 and $20 at the door. Tickets are being sold in Waters 119. All proceeds will go to the Kansas Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Last year, they donated $7,000 to the society, which supports one of the most underfunded causes, Theurer said.

“There are a few other universities that put together speakers and events to promote agriculture, but not with as many events as K-State,” said Barrett Smith, senior in animal sciences and industry and vice president of the Agriculture Student Council.

Smith said none of the universities have concerts and thus have used K-State’s Ag Fest as a model.

The new Bike Club held a kick-off event at triangle square in Aggieville on Saturday, starting at 10 a.m. The event was an introductory meeting for the club, which will begin its official Bike Week on May 2.

The Bike Week will include an event at City Park where members will get a chance to ride with the mayor and learn about bike maintenance and safety, bike to the movies and end with a Bike-to-Work Day, with lunch at City Park. There will also be a commuter challenge during the entire week where Manhattan organizations encourage their employees to bike to work. The organization who can log the highest employee participation and most miles biked to work will win the challenge, and the prize is a free party at Tallgrass Brewery. The winner will be announced at the last event of the week, Bike-to-Work Day.

“There used to be a bike club in Manhattan but it kind of died out,” said Jo Maseberg-Tomlinson, bike club treasurer.

Maseberg-Tomlinson, her husband, and the owner of the bicycle store Big Poppi in Aggieville decided to start another bike club. She said its goals are to promote biking as part of a healthy lifestyle, to make Manhattan more bike-friendly, and to give bikers the opportunity to meet each other. Maseberg-Tomlinson said the three of them have been meeting every Friday night since January, hammering out the details for the club.

The owner of Big Poppi sent an e-mail to people who bought bikes at his shop asking “[Biking gives] a sense of freedom, a healthy lifestyle and it’s the best way to stay in shape without injuries.”

Saadia Coppedge

if they would be interested in a bike club. The many “yes” responses they received encouraged them to hold an informational meeting on Saturday. The club is non-profit and plans to support area bike rides, map trails and get the Wamego-St. George-Manhattan bike trail completed.

Victoria McKenan, bicycle coordinator, said she chose to be a part of the club because she said she is “passionate about promoting biking as a mode of transportation.”

“It cuts down on traffic congestion, air pollution, it’s healthy and helps you become more naturally engaged with your environment,” McKenan said.

At the meeting, bikers enjoyed the nice weather, had refreshments, met new people, and got some information about the bike club and it’s mission.

Saadia Coppedge, tri-althlete, and junior in pre physical therapy, said she heard about the club through Big Poppi’s bike shop and came to the event to meet new cyclists. She said she started biking this year. Coppedge said cycling gives her “a sense of freedom, a healthy lifestyle and it’s the best way to stay in shape without injuries.”

The club will hold a more detailed informational meeting on April 11, at the Manhattan Public Library. Official club elections will take place at the meeting.

Membership is $10 for students, children and military, $15 for adults and $20 for families.

“Anyone in the community who is interested in cycling should join, regardless of their ability” Maseberg-Tomlinson said.
